

StoryADay.org

write every day, not "someday"

- Write a short story a day in May
- Conquer fear with near-impossible deadlines!
- Become more creative the more you write
- Find your writing posse in our free forums

What Is StoryADay May?

An extreme creativity challenge for writers, held online each May since 2010.

Q. How Do I Participate?

A. Write—and finish—a story every day in May.

Optional Extras:

- Sign up to be part of the online community at <http://StoryADay.org/signup>
- Use the daily writing prompts at the site to help keep the stories coming.
- Check out the 'rules' and resources at the site <http://StoryADay.org/faq>

Q. What If I'm Busy In May?

A. Set your own rules. (Maybe "every day" doesn't mean every day for you...)

*Wouldn't you love to have a stack of stories ready to revise and submit to publications?
Join us this May and kickstart your creativity!*

What People Are Saying About StoryADay

"StoryADay is even better than NaNoWriMo at making me turn off that pesky editor."

-Marian Allen, author and publisher.

"I was perpetually full of dread about writer's block...StoryADay taught me that I could [finish stories] and that I could do so consistently if I only tried hard enough. It was so...liberating!"

-Alexis A. Hunter, more than 50 published short stories.

"I needed fuel for story ideas and some form of prod to keep me focussed. StoryADay provided me with a lot of good ideas for generating flash fiction... terrific for churning up the creative juices, especially when I have been stuck."

-Cecilia Clark, stories in 30+ anthologies.

"[I was] in a real creative slump.... I thought I could manage to write short pieces for a month, and it would be a change. Give me a chance to get some creative energy flowing, which it did. I had great fun with it, and now write quite a lot of flash fiction."

-Sara Cain, The Eighth Circle (Jan 2016, Crooked Lane Books), & Mainline Writer member.

Find out more: www.storyayday.org/about